South Africa's Most Promising Companies:

Southern African Futures Bertil Odén, 1996 The fall of apartheid in South Africa and post cold war international development changed the preconditions for regionalization in southern Africa From being used as an instrument in the overlaying conflict between apartheid South Africa and the rest of the region it can now be constructively used to improve regional development This study examines a number of decisive factors for future southern African regionalization One of its conclusions is that the process will mainly be spontaneous rather than politically guided Functional integration in sectors like hydropower water management transport and communication is easier to envisage than traditional trade integration Investments rather than trade will be the driving force Threats to the three main interrelated components of a positive scenario for the region high economic growth political stability and absence of major armed conflicts between and within the countries are analyzed The risk that regionalization by default may lead to enclaves of growth and wealth in a sea of poverty is noted

A Most Promising Weed Steven C. Rubert, 1998 Thousands of African men women and children worked on European owned tobacco farms in colonial Zimbabwe from 1890 to 1945 Contrary to some commonly held notions these people were not mere bystanders as European capitalism penetrated into Zimbabwe but helped to shape the work and the living conditions they encountered as they entered wage employment Steven Rubert's fine study draws on a rich variety of sources to illuminate the lives of these workers The central focus of the study is the organization of workers compounds the social relationships there and the labor of women and children paid and unpaid Rubert's findings indicate the beginnings of a moral economy on the tobacco farms prior to 1945
