Current Genome-Wide Association Studies (GWAS) rely on genotype imputation to increase statistical power, improve fine-mapping of association signals, and facilitate meta-analyses. Due to the complex demographic history of Latin America and the lack of balanced representation of Native American genomes in current imputation panels, the discovery of locally relevant disease variants is likely to be missed, limiting the scope and impact of biomedical research in these populations. Therefore, the necessity of better diversity representation in genomic databases is a scientific imperative. Here, we expand the 1,000 Genomes reference panel (1KGP) with 134 Native American genomes (1KGP + NAT) to assess imputation performance in Latin American individuals of mixed ancestry. Our panel increased the number of SNPs above the GWAS quality threshold, thus improving statistical power for association studies in the region. It also increased imputation accuracy, particularly in low-frequency variants segregating in Native American ancestry tracts. The improvement is subtle but consistent across countries and proportional to the number of genomes added from local source populations. To project the potential improvement with a higher number of reference genomes, we performed simulations and found that at least 3,000 Native American genomes are Emerging Viruses in Latin America Flor H. Pujol, Alberto E. Paniz-Mondolfi, 2024-11-09 Latin America has extensive microbial diversity and is endemic for a wide array of infectious agents including dengue chikungunya malaria and tuberculosis In 2014 the WHO cited 93 public health events of potential international concern in the Latin American region where over half 47 events were caused specifically by chikungunya and other zoonotic pathogens causing geographically widespread impact affecting 27 countries and territories Arena alpha and flaviviruses are RNA viruses many of which are endemic in South America are diverse in nature and can adapt easily to new hosts creating zoonotic threats Since more than 70% of emerging diseases are caused by zoonotic agents it is of great importance to enhance the capacity for detection and diagnosis in the areas where they are most likely to emerge COVID 19 provided an opportunity to reinforce public health capacities improve reporting transparency and enhance regional coordination Limited but consistent research has been carried out in the region to address the viral threats that account for a significant portion of health concerns This book describes relevant examples of these achievements and discusses ongoing limitations in the region South America Into The 1990s G.
