Alistair Black, Simon Pepper, Kaye Bagshaw, 2017-05-15 Public libraries have strangely never been the subject of an extensive design history. Consequently, this important and comprehensive book represents a ground-breaking socio-architectural study of pre-1939 public library buildings. A surprisingly high proportion of these urban civic buildings remain intact and present an increasingly difficult architectural problem for many communities. The book thus includes a study of what is happening to these historic libraries now and proposes that knowledge of their origins and early development can help build an understanding of how best to handle their future. Coastal Trade and Maritime Communities in Elizabethan England Leanna Brinkley, 2024-08-06 This book is the first modern analysis of the coasting trade in Elizabethan England. Drawing on a significant body of evidence, including evidence from the port books of Bristol, Southampton and Hull, as well as from a much broader array of early modern sources, it reconstructs both coastal trading patterns and the lives of the merchants, mariners and craftspeople that underpinned them. While Bristol, Hull and Southampton represent the primary case study, ports a much broader geographical range is explored, providing new insights into not just the trade routes, markets, commodities and ships on which this key element of England's maritime economy rested, but also into the men and few women who plied coastal trade routes, exploring their socio-economic status, social and political networks and maritime business strategies. It analyses the linkages between merchants, shipmasters and ships, discusses merchants' business practices, including their approach to risk, and shows how this shaped the early modern shipping industry. In presenting evidence in an engaging and easily digestible way and making use of social network analysis, the book makes clear the complexities of coastal trader networks and the business acumen of coastal traders. While scholarly work hitherto has focused overly on overseas traders, this book corrects the imbalance, revealing in detail the complex commercial and personal lives that coastal traders lived during this pivotal period in England's maritime and commercial expansion. Leanna Brinkley completed her doctorate at the University of Southampton. Perspectives on Wearable Enhanced Learning (WELL) Ilona Buchem, Ralf Klamma, Fridolin Wild, 2019-11-01 Wearable technologies, such as smart glasses, smart watches, smart objects or smart garments, are potential game-changers, breaking ground and offering new opportunities for learning.
