Fiction and Narrative Derek Matravers, 2014-04-24 For the past twenty years there has been a virtual consensus in philosophy that there is a special link between fiction and the imagination In particular fiction has been defined in terms of the imagination what it is for something to be fictional is that there is some requirement that a reader imagine it Derek Matravers argues that this rests on a mistake the proffered definitions of the imagination do not link it with fiction but with representations more generally In place of the flawed consensus he offers an account of what it is to read listen to or watch a narrative whether that narrative is fictional or non fictional The view that emerges which draws extensively on work in psychology downgrades the divide between fiction and non fiction and largely dispenses with the imagination In the process he casts new light on a succession of issues on the paradox of fiction on the issue of fictional narrators on the problem of imaginative resistance and on the nature of our engagement with film

Saracho, Bernard Spodek, 1998-01-15 Play has been part of early childhood programs since the initial kindergarten developed by Friedrich Froebel more than one hundred and fifty years ago While research shows that most teachers value children's play they often do not know how to guide that play to make it more educational Too often in reflecting the value of child initiated activities teachers set the stage for children's play observe it but hesitate to intervene in that play They may fear that to intervene is to create a developmentally inappropriate set of educational practices However the lack of intervention may limit the educational outcomes of play Meanwhile a large body of research exists on different forms of children's play in educational settings that could inform teachers of young children and help them to improve their practice and support more educational play Saracho and Spodek bring together much of that research in an accessible volume for early childhood teachers and teacher educators      Apt Imaginings Jonathan Gilmore, 2020-01-21 How do our engagements with fictions and other products of the imagination compare to our experiences of the real world Are the feelings we have about a novel's characters modelled on our thoughts about actual people If it is wrong to feel pleasure over certain situations in real life can it nonetheless be right to take pleasure in analogous scenarios represented in a fantasy or film Should the desires we have for what goes on in a make believe story cohere with what we want to happen in the actual world Such queries have animated philosophical and psychological theorizing about art and life from Plato's Republic and Aristotle's Poetics to contemporary debates over freedom of expression ethics and aesthetics the cognitive value of thought experiments and the effects on audiences of exposure to violent entertainment In Apt Imaginings Jonathan Gilmore develops a new framework to pursue these questions marshalling a wide range of research in aesthetics the science of the emotions moral philosophy neuroscience cognitive psychology and film and literary theory Gilmore argues that while there is a substantial empirical continuity in our feelings across art and life the norms that govern the appropriateness of those responses across the divide are discontinuous In this view the evaluative criteria that determine the fit correctness or rationality of our emotions and desires for what is internal to a fiction can be contrary to those that govern our affective attitudes toward analogous things in the real world In short it can be right to embrace within a story what one would condemn in real life The theory Gilmore defends in this volume helps to explain our complex and sometimes conflicted attitudes toward works of the imagination challenges the popular view that fictions serve to refine our moral sensibilities and exposes a kind of autonomy of the imagination that can render our responses to art immune to standard real world epistemic practical and affective kinds of criticism
