Learn to speak and write Russian in 30 days YouGuide Ltd, Learning a non-native language in a naturalistic environment: Insights from behavioural and neuroimaging research Christos Pliatsikas, Vicky Chondrogianni, 2015-09-02 It is largely accepted in the relevant literature that successful learning of one or more non native languages is affected by a number of factors that are independent of the target language's per se these factors include the age of acquisition AoA of the target language's the type and amount of formal instruction the learners have received as well as the amount of language use that the learners demonstrate Recent experimental evidence suggests that one crucial factor for efficient native like performance in the non native language is the amount of naturalistic exposure or immersion that the learners receive to that language This can be broadly defined as the degree to which language learners use their non native language outside the classroom and for their day to day activities and usually presupposes that the learners live in an environment where their non native language is exclusively or mostly used Existing literature has suggested that linguistic immersion can be beneficial for lexical and semantic acquisition in a non native language as well as for non native morphological and syntactic processing More recent evidence has also suggested that naturalistic learning of a non native language can also have an impact on the patterns of brain activity underlying language processing as well as on the structure of brain regions that are involved expressed as changes in the grey matter structure This Research Topic brings together studies on the effects of learning and speaking a non native language in a naturalistic environment These include more efficient or native like processing in behavioural tasks tapping on language lexicon morphology syntax as well as changes in the brain structure and function as revealed by neuroimaging studies Teaching and Learning English in the Primary School Gila A. Schauer, 2019-10-11 This book is the first comprehensive investigation of interlanguage pragmatic issues in a primary school context that is based on both primary school teachers statements on their own teaching realities views and preferences and a thorough investigation of materials used by teachers and recommended by teacher educators in the state the primary schools are located in It offers a contrastive analysis of primary school learners acquiring English in a typical English as a foreign language school context and their age peers in the same state that are exposed to English in a school immersion context This book will be of interest to scholars researchers educators in higher education that focus on English language teaching second language acquisition and applied linguistics It is also intended for students who are planning to become primary school teachers of English as a foreign language Research in Education ,1971-12
