Pathogenic Advances and Therapeutic Perspectives for Eosinophilic Inflammation Florence E. Roufosse, Mats W. Johansson, 2018-12-06 With the recent approval of the first eosinophil depleting therapeutic agents targeting the IL 5 pathway for treatment of severe eosinophilic asthma eosinophils and eosinophilic disorders are in the limelight Indeed setbacks during clinical development of these compounds have revealed how much remains to be known about eosinophil biology in vivo and have nurtured profuse research both on basic eosinophil biology and on pathogenic disease mechanisms in order to better delineate the most meaningful targets for innovative therapeutic strategies On one hand variable degrees of eosinophil depletion observed in some compartments during IL 5 targeted treatment indicate that certain eosinophil subsets may not rely on this cytokine and or that other important pro eosinophilic mediators and signaling pathways are operative in vivo On the other hand it is increasingly clear that disorders involving eosinophils such as asthma are the final outcome of complex interactions between diverse cell types and mediators beyond eosinophils and IL 5 These include type 2 helper T Th2 cells and innate lymphoid cells mast cells and a variety of factors that either activate eosinophils or are released by them Although a considerable amount of research has focused on asthma because it is a common condition and because management of severe asthma remains a major challenge several rare eosinophilic disorders with more homogenous features have proven to be extremely useful models to reach a better understanding of the involvement of eosinophils in tissue damage and dysfunction and of the micro environmental interactions operating within the complex network of eosinophilic inflammation Unraveling this interplay has resulted in advances in the development of molecular tools to detect disease subsets and to monitor therapeutic responses and in identification of promising new therapeutic targets This Research Topic dedicated to eosinophilic conditions covers aspects of the biology of eosinophils and closely related cells of particular relevance for drug development reports on translational research investigating pathogenic mechanisms of specific eosinophilic disorders in humans that will likely result in significant changes in the way patients are managed and presents an overview of the current advancement of targeted drug development for these conditions with a special focus on asthma

Masino, 2017-10-03 Brain function is under metabolic control which in turn determines the equilibrium of homeostatic systems that affect neuronal and glial networks on the molecular cellular and systems levels The collection of articles ranges from molecules and mechanisms involved in regulating homeostasis and neuronal excitability to therapeutic mechanisms tailored to restore homeostatic function It also features neurological diseases and novel treatment approaches that are based on metabolic and homeostatic interventions Together the collection of articles outlines novel strategies to restore brain function in neurology and highlights limitations of conventional pharmacological approaches We suggest that restoration of molecular and biochemical networks could lead to a new era of therapeutic opportunities Cumulated Index Medicus ,1993 Index Medicus ,2001 Vols for
