

BOOK ILLUSTRATION Ron Finner's "procession" began as a page of a graphic novel which required someone to be sitting on an elephant.

The first sketch was inadvertently started too close to the bottom of the page, so the artist worked off the legs and the end of the trunk to make it look as though the animal were wading through a pool of milk. This seemed to work rather well, so the idea was developed further in later drawings with floating flowers and banners. The elephant itself was made more fanciful by giving it two hump-like wings of an eagle, butterfly, and then none. The figures on the elephant's back were worked on repeatedly, the finished artwork was in pen-and-ink but with watercolor.
