Strategy For Defeat The Luftwaffe 1933 1945:

Strategy For Defeat: The Luftwaffe, 1933-1945 [Illustrated Edition] Williamson Murray, 2015-11-06 Includes the Aerial Warfare In Europe During World War II illustrations pack with over 200 maps plans and photos This book is a comprehensive analysis of an air force the Luftwaffe in World War II It follows the Germans from their prewar preparations to their final defeat There are many disturbing parallels with our current situation I urge every student of military science to read it carefully The lessons of the nature of warfare and the application of airpower can provide the guidance to develop our fighting forces and employment concepts to meet the significant challenges we are certain to face in the future Strategy for Defeat Williamson Murray, 1986 Strategy for Defeat Air University, 2015-07-02 As with all military thought a wide variety of political historical and economic factors guided the development of air doctrines in the period between the First and Second World Wars Yet standing above all other influences was a revulsion against the mud and despair of the trenches Thus it is not surprising that an Italian senior officer Giulio Douhet would argue that airpower could prevent the repetition of a war that had cost Italy more than 400 000 dead In terms of the first formulations of air doctrine Douhet's thought did not prove particularly influential In Britain the development of doctrine both within and outside of the Royal Air Force RAF already was well advanced by the end of the First World War Douhet may have exercised more influence on American doctrine since various translated extracts of his work found their way into the library and schools of the American Air Service as early as 1922 But the formulation of a precision bombing doctrine in the United States raises the question of how deeply his writings influenced early Army Air Corps pioneers Yet Douhet's theories are symptomatic of intellectual attitudes current among military and civilian thinkers in the post World War I era They are therefore a useful point of departure Douhet's central single minded argument was that the decisive mission for an air force was strategic bombing All other missions would only detract from this role and thus were considered counterproductive and a misuse of air resources Douhet excluded the possibility of air defense denied fighter aircraft a place in future air forces and argued that close air support and interdiction were an irrelevant waste of aircraft The only role for the air force of the future would be that of strategic bombing Douhet further reasoned that the more heavily armed bomber would always prove superior to the fighter in air to air combat Underlying Douhet's arguments was a belief that bombardment of an enemy's population centers would shatter his morale and lead directly to the collapse of his war effort Such an attitude underlay most airpower theories between the wars and reflected a fundamental disbelief in the staying power of civilian societies Douhet's approach represented the hope that airpower and strategic bombing would enable international conflict to return to an era of short decisive wars and thus would allow Europe to escape the mass slaughter of the last war However nowhere in Douhet's writing is there a sense of the technological and industrial underpinnings necessary for air war This may subconsciously reflect the circumstance that Italy possessed none of the resources expertise or industrial requirements for such a war It is worth noting however that most other theorists of the period were similarly reluctant to recognize the technological and industrial complexities of their subject. In retrospect, what makes the present-day conventional wisdom that Douhet was the prophet of airpower so surprising is the fact that his theory denigrated all the major missions of modern air forces except strategic bombing. Douhet dismissed air defense, tactical air, airlift, reconnaissance, and air superiority as immaterial. Not surprisingly, he also argued that airpower eliminated the requirement for armies and navies; consequently, there was no need for interservice cooperation.

The Luftwaffe And Its War Of Attrition Lieutenant Colonel Patricia L. C. Priest, 2014-08-15 Over the years the United States Air Force takes much credit for bringing World War II to closure. The strategic bomber eventually, along with long-range fighters, was put in the skies over Germany to gain air superiority and to disrupt the war-making abilities of Germany, and in particular the Luftwaffe. The Luftwaffe had to be neutralized before the invasion of Normandy could take place. Granted, this was a necessary step. However, the Luftwaffe had already lost its fighting ability, and the war through poor strategy and judgment long before the strategic bomber and the long-range fighter could become factors in the war.

The Luftwaffe, 1933-45 Williamson Murray, 1996 This is a comprehensive study of the German Luftwaffe air force. It is a contribution to the history of World War II and to strategic thinking about the use and limitations of air power.

Big Wars John Storey, 2021-09-01 World War II was the biggest and most destructive war in history. For two centuries, wars had grown ever larger with the use of more terrible weapons and rising casualties culminating in the cataclysmic global events of 1939-45. And then quite suddenly, large international wars have all but disappeared. What caused wars to grow in size to such an extent and then shrink so precipitously? Is this a permanent state of affairs, or could big wars make a comeback? Lawyer and historian John P. Storey explores these questions by looking at the evolution of military technology and tactics over the long history of warfare. From ancient bronze spears and chariots to World War II tanks and warplanes, from the nuclear weapons of the Cold War to the drones and robotics of the future, the changes in our methods of waging war have had and will continue to have a major impact on their size and destructiveness. The sobering conclusion Storey makes is that based on past trends and the weapons in the pipeline for the future, there is a much higher risk of there being much bigger wars in the coming decades.

Case Studies in the Achievement of Air Superiority Benjamin Franklin Cooling (III), 1994 Case studies in the achievement of air superiority, Stopped at Stalingrad Joel S. A. Hayward, 1998 By the time Hitler declared war on the Soviet Union in 1941, he knew that his military machine was running out of fuel. In response, he launched Operation Blau, a campaign designed to protect Nazi oilfields in Romania while securing new ones in the Caucasus. All that stood in the way was Stalingrad.

Military Innovation in the Interwar Period Williamson R. Murray, Allan R. Millett, 1996-08-28 In 1914, the armies and navies that faced each other were alike right down to the strengths of their companies and battalions, and the designs of their battleships and cruisers. Differences were of degree rather than essence. During the interwar period, however, the armed forces grew increasingly asymmetrical, developing different approaches to the same problems. This study of major military innovations in the 1920s and 1930s explores differences in exploitation by the seven major military powers The comparative essays investigate how and why innovation occurred or did not occur and explain much of the strategic and operative performance of the Axis and Allies in World War II The essays focus on several instances of how military services developed new technology and weapons and incorporated them into their doctrine organisation and styles of operations
