Strength Evaluation of an Existing Concrete Bridge Based on Core and Nondestructive Test Data ,1987 The use of concrete cores and nondestructive testing for strength evaluation of existing structures is illustrated through an evaluation of an existing concrete bridge the results confirm that rebound hammer number should not be used alone as an indicator of in situ compressive strength reasonably good correlation is demonstrated between pulse velocity and compressive strength with a slight improvement when pulse velocity and rebound number are combined a probabilistic approach to structural evaluation of existing structures is proposed in which the variability of in situ concrete compression strength and uncertainty associated with indirect nondestructive testing are incorporated an example of shear strength is given which indicates a range of increase in shear strength compared with initial design parameters of 17 37% depending on the amount and type of data available Strength Evaluation of Existing Concrete Bridges ,1985 Strength Evaluation of Existing Concrete Bridges.
