

A Step-by-Step Revision of the Treaty of Versailles? Gustav Stresemann's Eastern Policy

*Péter Hevő*¹

Abstract

Gustav Stresemann, Nobel Peace Prize laureate and German Foreign Minister of the 1920s, is well-known for the international cooperation of the Weimar Republic with Europe's great powers. He simultaneously pursued a peaceful modification of the eastern boundaries of Germany, while accepting the reality of the Versailles system. This paper analyses the change in Germany's relations with her eastern neighbours, as well as Stresemann's intentions to achieve border revisions and to support German minorities abroad. It is especially exciting to consider the purposes of the German approach to the Soviet Union in Stresemann's program, and if this could have been used to force concessions from the West. The study also sheds light on why Stresemann overestimated the revisionist potential of the Locarno Treaties, and on the remaining possibilities of border revisions that existed at the end of his six-year tenure as Foreign Minister.

Keywords: Gustav Stresemann, Weimar Republic, Treaty of Versailles, revision, Locarno Treaties

Introduction

Gustav Stresemann recently became the focus of attention of the German press when the political party Alternative für Deutschland (AfD) named its party foundation after him, resulting in a legal dispute with the grandsons of the late foreign minister (cf. Spiegel 2018). According to the heirs, the views of their grandfather were far from everything the AfD represents. This brought forward the whole question of what the legacy of Stresemann means for Germany, for Europe and for history.
