Media Violence and its Effect on Aggression Jonathan L. Freedman, 2002-12-15 The scientific evidence does not support the notion that TV and film violence cause aggression in children or in anyone else So argues Jonathan Freedman based on his findings that far fewer than half of the scientific studies have found a causal connection between exposure to media violence and aggression or crime In fact Freedman believes that taken to a more controversial extreme the research could be interpreted as showing that there is no causal effect of media violence at all Media Violence and its Effect on Aggression offers a provocative challenge to the accepted norms in media studies and psychology Freedman begins with a comprehensive review of all the research on the effect of violent movies and television on aggression and crime Having shown the lack of scientific support for the prevailing belief that media violence is connected to violent behaviour he then explains why something that seems so intuitive and even obvious might be incorrect and goes on to provide plausible reasons why media violence might not have had effects on children He contrasts the supposed effects of TV violence on crime with the known effects of poverty and other social factors and discusses the difference between television advertising which he argues does have an effect and violent programs which do not Freedman concludes by noting that in recent years television and films have been as violent as ever and violent video games have become more and more popular yet during this period there has been a dramatic decrease in violent crime He argues that this makes it highly implausible that media violence causes aggression or crime
