

Language Policy in Slovenia

Sonja Novak-Lukanovič, Department of Comparative and General Linguistics, University of Ljubljana and Institute for Ethnic Studies, Slovenia, and

David Limon, Department of Translation, University of Ljubljana, Slovenia¹

Abstract

The historical background, political changes, migration processes, EU membership and the current socio-linguistic situation have all influenced language policy and language planning in Slovenia. This paper presents the most important aspects of language policy in Slovenia with a focus on the concept of linguistic diversity. The ethnic make-up of Slovenia, including the differing statuses and rights of specific groups, is described in order to facilitate understanding of language policy. The role of language within education is explored, in particular in relation to bilingual education in nationally mixed areas. Two models of bilingual education (involving Slovene plus Italian or Hungarian) are presented and finally pupils' attitudes towards these models and the minority language involved, obtained through an empirical research project, are discussed.

Key words:

Slovenia, Slovene language, language policy, bilingual education, ethnic diversity, nationally mixed areas
