Fire, Native Peoples, and the Natural Landscape Thomas Vale, 2013-04-16 For nearly two centuries the creation myth for the United States imagined European settlers arriving on the shores of a vast uncharted wilderness Over the last two decades however a contrary vision has emerged one which sees the country's roots not in a state of pristine nature but rather in a human modified landscape over which native peoples exerted vast control Fire, Native Peoples and the Natural Landscape seeks a middle ground between those conflicting paradigms offering a critical research based assessment of the role of Native Americans in modifying the landscapes of pre European America Contributors focus on the western United States and look at the question of fire regimes the single human impact which could have altered the environment at a broad landscape scale and which could have been important in almost any part of the West Each of the seven chapters is written by a different author about a different subregion of the West evaluating the question of whether the fire regimes extant at the time of European contact were the product of natural factors or whether ignitions by Native Americans fundamentally changed those regimes An introductory essay offers context for the regional chapters and a concluding section compares results from the various regions and highlights patterns both common to the West as a whole and distinctive for various parts of the western states The final section also relates the findings to policy questions concerning the management of natural areas particularly on federal lands and of the naturalness of the pre European western landscape
