Manual of Laboratory Immunology Linda E. Miller, 1991 Blood Use in Cardiac Surgery N. Friedel, R. Hetzer, D. Royston, 2013-06-29 Cardiac surgery has developed dramatically since the first open heart operations were performed in the mid 1950s Although the improvement of surgical technique extracorporeal circulation and postoperative management has contributed to a marked reduction of morbidity and mortality the development of cardiac surgery to its present state would not have been possible without blood substitution by homologous donor blood Only 20 years ago open heart operations required an average of 8 units of blood preserves The excessive need of donor blood in those early days was mainly due to premature surgical technique insecure control of anticoagulation severe blood trauma by extracorporeal circulation and the lack of retransfusion technologies that would have allowed the reuse of shed mediastinal blood The introduction of new technologies such as normovolemic hemodilution in intraoperative autotransfusion postoperative return of shed mediastinal blood and predonation of autologous blood has greatly reduced donor blood requirements At present the majority of routine coronary artery surgical procedures can be performed without any blood transfusion Blood loss however may be considerable in patients undergoing complex valve surgery or reoperations as they often require several units of transfused blood Blood conservation has now become an area of major interest for the cardiac surgeon This increased concern is caused by infectious complications of blood transfusion in particular hepatitis and more recently AIDS

Research Surgery and Care of the Research Animal William I. Gay, James E. Heavner, 2013-10-22 Methods of Animal Experimentation Volume VII Research Surgery and Care of the Research Animal Part A is a collection of papers that deals with methods used in animal experiments involving patient care vascular access and telemetry This book concerns technologies in experimental surgery complicated procedures requiring longer observation time of the test animal and an increase in the spectrum of animals that can be used One paper describes the anesthesia analgesia and kinds of restraints that are suited for the test animal A wide array of choices of inhalational agents injectable local anesthesia lidocaine analgesics opioids and aspirin and restraint nonanesthesia and neuromuscular blocking agents is available for the researcher to choose from Several authors also describe the use of telemetry devices that are implantable in test animals to achieve minimal interference from the investigator These devices include sensors such as flow transducers and probes to use in pulse or continuous wave applications electromagnetic flowmeters for blood monitoring and integrated circuits for various applications One paper discusses postoperative care including a patient care checklist treatment of common postoperative complications as well as venous catheters for fluid administration This text will be appreciated by veterinarians technicians dealing with laboratory animals and researchers designing animal and medical experiments
