

Slowing population growth and a decline in North Sea oil activity are among key challenges to the long-term growth outlook.

The labour market has remained robust, with the unemployment rate ending at 4% over 2021, although this was partly due to a somewhat high share of the working-age population outside of the labour market (36.1%) compared to the UK (26.9%). Consistent with a tight labour market, employee wage growth averaged 4.1% last year, above the UK average of 3.2%. The strong wage pay could be partly explained by a relatively high level of vacancies in Scotland as well as the make-up of financial sector activities, which are associated with less volatile bonus payments compared to the Civil Service.
