Taste & Smell

Taste & smell

Most of our special senses are chemoreception systems: gustation (taste) and olfaction (smell). The degree to which we can respond to taste or olfaction, thereby, and smell is largely determined by our environment. In fact, olfaction, thereby, and smell is largely determined by our environment. Concentrations

Taste receptors vary depending on the concentration of the substance in a given solution or solid. For low concentrations, taste is sweet and salty; moderate concentrations are sour and bitter; and high concentrations are very sweet and very salty.

Gustation

Gustation, the sense of taste, gives us information about the food and drink that we consume. Taste buds on the primary gustatory organ, the tongue, contain chemoreceptors called gustatory cells. These taste buds have four basic components: sweet, sour, salty, and bitter. A fifth taste, umami, or savory, has been reported. This flavor is associated with umami, or the aged flavor of meat broth.

The taste bud

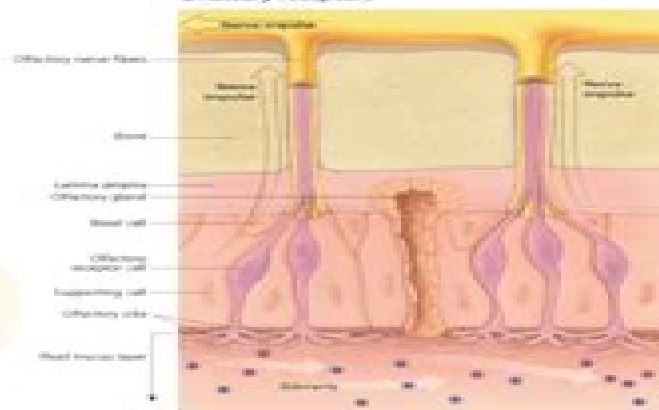

Each taste bud contains gustatory cells that respond to the taste of the food. The resulting receptor potential travels to the brain via the gustatory nerve. The gustatory nerve is composed of the axons of the gustatory cells. The gustatory nerve is composed of the axons of the gustatory cells. Olfaction

The sense of smell is called olfaction, or the detection of odors. Olfaction depends on specialized chemical receptors, or chemoreceptors, located within the olfactory epithelium. These receptors are designed to respond to small amounts of an odorant, a molecule that can be smelled. The brain integrates the input from several different receptors to identify a particular odor. Humans can detect about 10,000 odors.

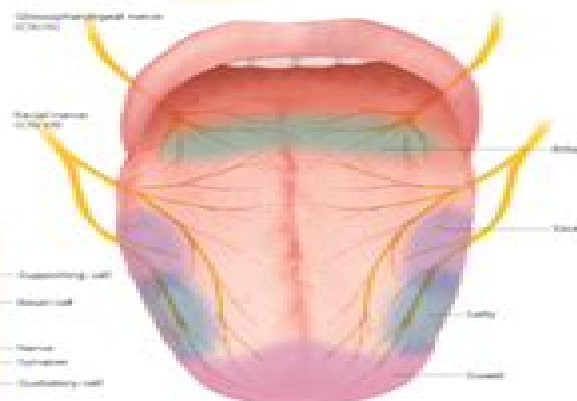

As air flows through the nose, the odors across the nasal cavity pass over the olfactory epithelium. Incoming odorant molecules can interact with the olfactory neurons, leading to the ability to detect odors by increasing the release of an impulse, which can activate the neurons of the brain.

Olfactory receptors

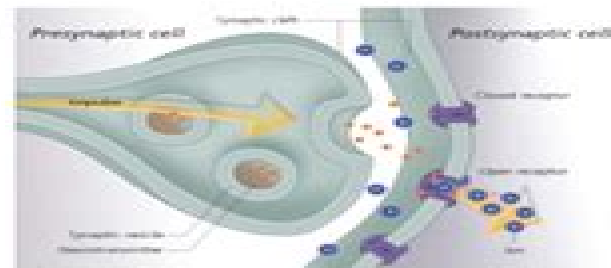

Olfactory receptors

Olfaction depends on the olfactory epithelium, which is located in the upper part of the nasal cavity. The olfactory epithelium is composed of olfactory neurons, supporting cells, and basal cells. The olfactory neurons are specialized to detect odors by increasing the release of an impulse, which can activate the neurons of the brain.

Compound sweet and salty tastes, we can tell more about the taste of a food by combining the signals from the olfactory epithelium and the taste buds. The olfactory epithelium is composed of olfactory neurons, supporting cells, and basal cells. The olfactory neurons are specialized to detect odors by increasing the release of an impulse, which can activate the neurons of the brain.

The synapse

Neurons communicate with other cells at a synapse, the site of a nerve impulse transmission. The space between the presynaptic, or sending, neuron and the postsynaptic, or receiving, cell is called the synaptic cleft. An impulse enters at the tip of the axon, the axon hillock, where "trigger" molecules called neurotransmitters. These highly specialized chemicals carry nerve impulses from the presynaptic cell to the postsynaptic cell. The neurotransmitter binds to the receptor on the postsynaptic cell, which activates the postsynaptic cell.
