Over the past 30 years, formal approaches to second and additional language acquisition (SLA) have made great advances in understanding the nature of the multilingual mind. However, it is undeniable that most of the research into the speech of learners and multilinguals has focused on more phonetic rather than phonological approaches. These phonetic approaches, among other contributions, enrich our understanding of surface variation in the production and perception of various sound phenomena. Complementing these phonetic approaches, phonological approaches seek to describe mental representations that connect sound and meaning and may tell us about both universal and language-specific patterns in non-native development and use. Studies undertaking these objectives, however, are comparatively scarce in the literature, particularly
