

SLOW CORTICAL POTENTIALS REFLECT THE REGULATION OF CORTICAL EXCITABILITY

Thomas Elbert

SUMMARY

A model is described which postulates ways in which regulatory circuits within the brain might generate electrical activity underlying spontaneous EEG fluctuations and event-related slow potentials (ERP) of the brain. We suggest that slow potentials represent a measure of the excitability of cortical neuronal networks and that this excitability must be regulated within distinct limits. The regulation has reflexive characteristics but must contain anticipatory elements as well.

Five main postulates are basic to the model:

- (1) The electrical sources of event-related slow potentials and other large amplitude EEG activity reside in the dendritic trees of cortical pyramidal neurons.
- (2) Surface negative potentials represent a measure for the excitability in the underlying neural tissue, surface positivity signifies widespread absence of facilitation.
- (3) Slow potentials indicate availability and spatial allocation of resources for information processing performed by the underlying neural tissue. Direction of attention and memory search will generate negative potentials in those neural assemblies which process the respective concepts. Memory storage and updating of information require that large proportions of the neural network be shut off and therefore they are accompanied by widespread positive waves of high amplitude. The electrical source of these waves can be traced to neural populations not involved in the storage process.
- (4) Conscious processes arise above a certain amount of cortical excitability; they appear when threshold levels of negative DC shifts are exceeded.

International Perspectives on Self-Regulation and Health John G. Carlson, A. Ronald Seifert, 2013-11-21 An attractive feature of self regulation therapies is that instead of doing something to the patients they teach them to do something for themselves Furthermore the fact that the patient is able to do something to cope with his or her health problem can produce a significant reduction in the stress that may have contributed to that problem and in the additional stress that it produces While the idea that the mind can play a role in the health of the body and some therapeutic techniques based on this idea are not new remarkable scientific advances have been made recently in the area of self regulation and health There has been an exciting and rapidly accelerating increase in our basic science knowledge of homeostasis or in other words how the body regulates itself in order to maintain health Technical and conceptual advances are increasing our knowledge of the details of such regulation at all levels cells tissues organs organ systems and the body as a whole We are learning how the competing demands of different elements at each of these levels are adjusted by the brain which with its neural and humoral mechanisms is the supreme organ of integration of the body

Most military researchers who have attempted to measure organizational commitment have done so on an ad hoc basis preferring to invent new items and scales rather than incorporate well established measures The purpose of this special issue is to reverse this trend by bringing military organizational commitment research into the scientific mainstream and to do so in ways that will prove useful to military services while advancing organizational commitment theory and knowledge This special issue grew out of a symposium conducted at the 1998 American Psychological Association Convention that arose when many in the field recognized the practical importance of measuring organizational commitment while maintaining a healthy concern for ensuring that this measurement was well grounded in organizational commitment theory Taken together the articles in this issue demonstrate the concepts of affective and continuance commitment and their underlying measures by using them in different military samples and under a variety of operational conditions
