

$$= \text{Area } (c + f)$$

- Producer surplus increases:

$$= \text{Area } (g + h + j + k)$$
- It also results in deadweight loss:

$$= \text{Area } (m + n)$$
- While producer surplus increases, social surplus which is the sum of consumer and producer surplus decreases.
- Monopolist firm not only results in price increase as compared with perfect competition, product quantity is reduced as well.

Monopoly Vs. Free Market

Short run and Long run

- In short run if demand is not sufficient anymore (e.g. because of recession), economic profits may become negative. Therefore, profits in short run can be positive, negative or zero.
- In long run, the monopolist can change its scale of production to maximize profits. Since there is a barrier to entry, it is not necessary for the monopolist to achieve optimal scale (which is the minimum of long run average cost curve). Such decision is based entirely on market demand.
- The existence of barrier to entry prevents firms to enter the market in long run. It is therefore, possible for a firm to continue making positive economic profits in long run. Economic profits in the long run can be both positive or zero.

Economic Efficiency:

- Monopoly equilibrium does not achieve allocative efficiency in short or long run as prices are higher than MC and social surplus is not maximum.
