

Chapter 3

Ethical Issues in Counseling Practice

Ethical Issues and Problems for Examination

These groups of questions correspond to the sections in Chapter 3 of the textbook. Make a brief outline of your position on each of these ethical issues.

1. Introduction

- What one ethical issue would you most want to explore and talk about in class?
- In what sense are ethical issues an integral part of counseling practice regardless of one's theoretical orientation?

2. Putting clients' needs before your own

- What are some of your personal needs that you think will help you become a more effective counselor?
- What are some of your personal needs that you think may hinder you in effectively counseling clients?

3. Ethical decision making

- In what way can you make the ethics codes work for you? How might the codes be a catalyst for your thinking about ethical dilemmas?
- If you were faced with an ethical dilemma, what specific steps would you take in making a decision?

4. The right of informed consent

- The ethics codes of most professional organizations require that clients be presented with enough information to make informed choices about entering the client-therapist relationship. What are some matters you would explore with your clients at the first and second counseling sessions?
- Assume that during an initial session with a client you determine that this individual would best be helped by a referral. If there were no referral sources available, what would you do?
- In the informed consent process, what would you want to say to your clients about potential problems of privacy regarding any technology that may be a part of your professional relationship?

5. Dimensions of confidentiality

- What information would you give your clients about the nature and purpose of confidentiality? What would you say if a client asked you under what circumstances you would break confidentiality? How would you explain the limits of confidentiality to your clients during the initial session?
- What concerns might you have about confidentiality over the use of technology in counseling?
