

Graph of Cable Stitch

To create a down cable, keep the thread below the needle and make a back stitch into the next pleat. The needle should be perpendicular to the pleats and pick up only half of the pleat above the gathering thread.

Pull the thread until the two pleats just touch. The thread will emerge from a down cable just above the stitch. Keep the thread upwards above the row and hold it with your thumb and take a stitch into the next pleat.

This will form an 'up-cable'. The needle always enters the pleats in the same position and is never angled up or down. The stitches change due to the thread alternating above and below the needle. Two or more rows of cable can be added on top of each other.

Cable is the preferred stitch for backsmocking.

OUTLINE AND STEM STITCH

These stitches, like cable, are also useful for binders because they are straight and tight. They are delicate stitches with only a little elasticity.

For outline stitch, begin as usual, but hold the thread above the needle as it enters each pleat. Keep your needle horizontal.

For stem stitch, hold the thread below the needle at every stitch.

Stitch directly above the gathering thread to make sure you are stitching in a straight line.

Outline and stem stitch will tend to resist your thread very quickly. Hold your work upside down and let the needle hang and gently un-twist. Run the needle up and down the thread a few times, then continue to smock.

To end off your thread when smocking with either of these two stitches, leave the thread loose and begin with the new thread and smock approximately 3cm before taking the old thread to the back and ending off the old thread. This gives a tighter join that is less noticeable.

WHEAT STITCH: A row of outline with stem below is called 'wheat stitch'.
