

STEROIDS AND NEURONAL ACTIVITY

Glucocorticoids (GCs) are steroid hormones that play a central role in the regulation of metabolism, immune response, and stress. They are synthesized in the adrenal cortex and can be administered exogenously. GCs exert their effects through two primary mechanisms: genomic and non-genomic. The genomic mechanism involves the binding of GCs to intracellular receptors, forming a complex that acts as a transcription factor to regulate gene expression. The non-genomic mechanism involves the interaction of GCs with cell surface receptors, leading to rapid effects on ion channels and second messenger systems. GCs are used in the treatment of various conditions, including inflammation, autoimmune diseases, and certain types of cancer. However, long-term use can lead to significant side effects, such as osteoporosis, hypertension, and diabetes. Understanding the mechanisms of action and the clinical applications of GCs is essential for their safe and effective use.
