Talks of Napoleon at St. Helena with General Baron Gourgaud Gaspard Baron Gourgaud, 1904 Talks of Napoleon at St. Helena with General Baron Gourgaud Gaspard Gourgaud, Talks of Napoleon at St. Helena with General Baron Gourgaud Baron Gaspard Gourgaud, 2017-01-23 First published in its English translation in 1903 this memoir is composed from private journal entries of Gaspard Gourgaud as a result of his conversations with Napoleon I of France between June 1815 and March 1818 during the latter's exile on St Helena. Additionally, journal entries made by Gourgaud on his voyage to St Helena with Napoleon are included. It is hoped that this record of what Napoleon said taken down by one whose truthfulness Napoleon himself vouched for may be found interesting by many who might have been wearied by reading the larger part of this record although it was kept by a man who loved his master devotedly and who had been attached to his personal service since 1812. The one capital and superior record of life at St Helena is the private journal of General Gourgaud. It was written in the main at least for his own eye without flattery or even prejudice. It is sometimes almost brutal in its realism. He alone of all the chroniclers strove to be accurate and on the whole succeeded. Lord Roseberry, Napoleon: The Last Phase. Journal Of General Baron Gourgaud From The Day After The Battle Of Waterloo June 19 1815 To The Arrival Of Napoleon At St Helena October 15 1815 June p The Emperor reached Charleroy at 7 o'clock in the morning passed through the town and crossed the Sambre. He passed some time in the meadow which lies to the right after crossing the bridge. There he tried to rally a small body of cavalry carbineers etc. It was a vain effort. The men who fell into the ranks on one side slipped out at the other. His Majesty ate something. His servants rejoined me with those of Lariboisiere my horse being exhausted I took one of his. The Emperor told me to give orders to four companies of pontonniers who were near equipped for bridge building to abandon their drays and their boats and to fall back with the horses and soldiers of their party on Avesnes. I also hastened the departure of a number of peasants carts loaded with wine bread etc. They contained a considerable quantity of provisions while in the army we were dying of hunger. His Majesty who was greatly fatigued demanded a caleche We told him the roads were encumbered with vehicles and that in a carriage he could not escape from the light horse of the enemy which every moment we expected to appear He then remounted on horseback and for a short time we took the road to Avesnes but after being informed that there were partisans of the enemy at Beaumont the Emperor decided to go toward Philippeville After a time we met some of our men in flight who tried to obstruct our passage His Majesty hesitated for a moment but seeing no enemy decided we must go on we therefore resumed our route With Saint Yon Regnault Amillet and
