TEST OF VISUAL ANALYSIS SKILLS

DIRECTIONS FOR ADMINISTRATION

JEROME ROSNER

The TVAS is either an individual or small group test of a child's ability to understand the relationship of parts to wholes. It is not timed. Children may erase if they wish.

Since the test is stopped when the child makes two successive errors, monitoring the child's work is important. To be scored as correct, the drawing must have the right number of lines and they must be located on the proper dots. Touching the dots, however, is not critical for a correct score. If lines are omitted or added, or if lines are located on the wrong dots, score the item as incorrect.

The instructions are: "Here are maps. Next to each one is a map with lines missing. You draw lines on your map so they look just like the one that is already made for you."

If the child reaches Item 10, say, for it, and subsequent items, through Item 16, "Some of the dots are missing on your map. Don't draw in the dots. Just pretend they are there. Draw the lines on your map as though the dots were there."

For Items 17 and 18, say, "All the dots are missing on your map. Don't draw the dots. Just pretend they are there. Draw the lines as though the dots were there."

Encourage the child (or do it for him) to fold pages so that only one page at a time is exposed.
