

Given their combination of the permanent character of regional and occupational dress, it is to be wondered that the artist's character of historical costumes took care not to have their work confused with a fashion plate. A fashion plate must precede the release of the perfection of a piece of clothing or outfit and the necessity of being it is made. Until about the mid-nineteenth century a type of plate displayed a well-dressed figure, with or without a period. Backgrounds are muted to neutralize, and since the interest is clothing for its own sake, anything that might distract from that interest is avoided. Whether the fashion plate tells us what we should be wearing, a costume illustration demonstrates what a person once did.

and from ourselves is winning, and perhaps why he or she has continued to wear it for a lifetime. To be sure, this illustration of a striking costume tells others the details of dress, but finds equal delight in showing its atmosphere and setting. People are often portrayed near a local landmark in an architectural movement, or in a domestic interior. The artist is more involved with an appreciative reporting of human experience than with an identification of what is to come.

For example, the French painter Louis Daguer made an extended journey to Athens and Constantinople in 1826, and he commemorated it with a highly praised volume concentrating largely on Greek and Turkish personages clothed according to their occupation or social status, but art and ethnography, not history, were his priorities. The splendor of costumes and ceremonial rites certainly intrigued Daguer, yet he was equally fascinated by laws, positions, landscapes and architectural remains. No greater compliment could have been paid to Daguer than when Miss, Thellogie herself proclaimed that his drawings conveyed the finest scenes of Greece that she had ever seen. With Images d'Athènes et de Constantinople, Daguer had evoked one of the most distinguished travel artists of the day but he was one of many artists who responded superbly to the challenge of depicting the possibilities of a newly expanding world. The final in 1827, two years before the advent of photography, which would soon triumph as the ultimate art form for recording the monuments and man-made environment.
