

What is critical reading?

‘Critical’ can be used to mean many things in educational contexts (Goatly and Hiradhar, 2016) and in some uses it is concerned with no more than evaluating the evidence and arguments put forward for any given point of view. This is the sense that is often associated with ‘critical thinking’. However, ‘critical’ is also used to describe the process of uncovering the ideological beliefs that underpin social practices, and in particular the ways in which relations of power are enacted. For example, in the context of journalism, we may critique the portrayals of minority groups in the media.

Critical reading starts with the assumption that many texts – and all texts that try to persuade us in some way – are not neutral but instead are influenced by the writer’s beliefs and attitudes. The writer attempts to ‘position’ their readers – to make them see the world from a particular point of view. It is important, therefore that readers are aware of how they are being positioned and that they are able to ‘read’ the subtext – to see any hidden agenda – as well as more explicitly stated messages. Is the reader pushed towards accepting a particular view of the world, for example? Does the writer make assumptions about norms and behaviours that, given time to reflect, we would want to question?

A writer may use their position in quite subtle ways to promote their own judgements. For example, if we read Jay gushed about being in love we are positioned by the verb gush to see this emotion as something trivial, even infantile. But the verb was chosen by the writer. In the sentence Jay talked about being in love there is no negative assessment. Therefore, critical reading requires constant questioning, not just of comprehension (Do I understand the text?) but of the judgements and views that underpin the text. This can be a difficult task because often those views are only implied, rather than being explicitly stated.

When we start to think carefully about text types, it is clear that very many are persuasive in some form or other. Obviously, advertisements try to persuade us that a particular product or service is worth paying for. But there are many less obvious examples too. Media texts (from news organizations and the like) will aim to persuade us that a story is both true and has importance. Literary texts persuade us that fictional characters and places are believable and reflect, or shed light on, our own world experiences. Even academic texts are persuasive in nature in that they aim to persuade us that the arguments put forward have relevance and explanatory power.

Critical readers are sensitive to the implicit as well as explicit messages of a text, and test the text against alternative explanations and views. As such, critical readers are constantly making judgements as to how plausible and trustworthy a text is.

Why is critical reading important?

Texts depict the world we live in and so contribute to us constructing views of what we find normal and acceptable as a society (Stubbs, 1996). This is equally true in specific domains and so the texts we read about language teaching, for example, help to shape what we consider to be ‘standard practice’
