

EL-HAMMAMIYA IN DYNASTY 5

Pl. 1.

The tombs under consideration are situated in a cliff immediately to the north of the modern village of El-Hammamiya (الهمامية) near El-Badari in the Governorate of Asyut. The cemetery was used by the nomarchs and other officials who governed the tenth province of Upper Egypt (U.E. 10), the W3ḏt nome,¹ in Dynasty 5. No Sixth Dynasty tombs are known in this province and one wonders if, with the use of all the suitable spots in the relatively small cemetery of El-Hammamiya, the later burial ground had to be moved to a new location yet to be discovered. At El-Hammamiya, on the east bank of the Nile, the cliff is formed of rather poor quality limestone. Decoration was achieved in bas-relief in the tombs of Group A, but their scenes have suffered in many areas due to the flaking of the rock surface. The damage is particularly noticeable in tomb A3, where the relief is very low, while in tombs A1 and A2 the relatively high relief is much better preserved. The scenes in the long corridor chapels of A2 and A3 are generally in better condition in the southern part. It cannot be determined whether this part was better finished, being closer to the main entrance, or if the northern part deteriorated to a greater extent because of exposure to the elements from the northern entrance. Preservation of scenes in the southern entrance corridors of A2 and A3 is poor, but this is the result of these having no roofs. In A1, where a similar entrance corridor is roofed, the scenes are very well preserved. No decoration was found in the tombs of Group B. Very little relief has survived in the decorated tombs of Group C, which includes the sole tomb in the cemetery found with decoration in paint only. The scenes painted on white plaster in C5, belonging to R^c-hṛp, are poorly preserved. The style of art at El-Hammamiya is generally not of the best quality and the relief has little detailed modelling. This may be partly due to the relatively poor quality of rock with which the artists had to work. On the other hand, certain sections of scenes are better executed than others, which suggests that more than one artist was employed to decorate each tomb. This is supported by a study of colours in tomb A2, revealing some differences in colour conventions between the east and west walls.

Using the style of art and the names mentioned in tombs A2 and A3, Petrie dated these to Dynasty 4, and more specifically to the reign of Khufu.² Smith, on the other hand, compared these two tombs with those of Nj-k3-ḥnh at Tehna and K3(j)-m-nfrt at El-Hagarsa and placed them in Dynasty 5.³ A comparison with the well dated tombs at Tehna also led Kees to date the El-Hammamiya tombs to the
