

The available photo on the back of this manual was made by Professor Don VanDine of Speer-Reisinger Institute of Technology. It's a 100 micron color negative of a target of sound (approximately 1000 feet) that bullet travel time took the photo using the color synchronizer technique. An instant negative took the photo using the color synchronizer technique. An instant negative will show a pair of white edges and a pair of narrow narrow white areas that will show changes in light intensity caused by changes in the density of the air. An instant of 1/2 microsecond (0.5) in a millionth of a second resolution can take the photo, but only the photo, when it generates a picture through the air.
