about dyslexia in secondary and tertiary education Yet the debates about dyslexia are often narrowly based and can exclude some teachers This book attempts to open up the debate by bringing together different ways of talking and thinking about dyslexia Fundamental questions about how to respond to dyslexia in teaching and support contexts are addressed and the significance of exploratory conversations between learners and tutors is recognised The need to restructure the structured approach and to consider meta affectivity as well as metacognition is explored Practitioners in both secondary and tertiary

Bear, 2013-07-04 This volume unites spelling and word recognition two areas that have largely remained theoretically and empirically distinct Despite considerable advances in the investigation of processes underlying word perception and the acknowledgement of the seminal importance of lexical access in the reading and writing processes to date the development and functioning of orthographic knowledge across both encoding and decoding contexts has rarely been explored The book begins to fill this void by offering a coherent and unified articulation of the perceptual linguistic and cognitive features that characterize an individual s advancing word orthographic knowledge providing evidence for a common knowledge base underlying spelling in writing and word recognition in reading From a developmental perspective the studies and syntheses presented in this volume blend insights from psychology and language study with those from clinical and classroom observations These insights help explain how individuals from preschool through adolescence develop knowledge of the orthographic system underlying word structure in English and how they apply this knowledge in actual writing and reading contexts Implications are drawn for the assessment and teaching of spelling vocabulary and word analysis from primary through middle grades
