A Descriptive Study of Child and Adolescent Obsessional Followers JT. McCann, 2000. This study is a preliminary descriptive investigation of the phenomenon of stalking in children and adolescents. Data on offender characteristics, victim characteristics, and stalking patterns were examined in a sample of 13 obsessional followers ranging in age from 9 to 18. Many research findings from investigations on adults who stalk were replicated in this study, including the fact that most stalking offenders are male, most victims are female, and about half of stalking cases involve threats made toward the victim. In addition, the rate of violence was 31% in this sample of juvenile stalking offenders, and the most common methods of stalking were physical approach, telephone calls, and letter writing. Some interesting trends in the data emerged which require further study and suggest some differences may exist between juvenile and adult stalking offenders. The results are preliminary and suggest directions for future research.

Forensic Psychology Joanna Adler, Jacqueline Gray, 2010-10-06. This book brings together academics, practitioners, and experts in the field of forensic psychology to demonstrate the scope of the discipline and push its parameters. Its aim is to go beyond introductory texts to challenge perceptions, to raise questions for research, and to pose problems for practice. The editors hope to inspire and stimulate debate about how forensic psychology can aid the practice of justice. The book is divided into six sections addressing key topics from the discipline: investigation and prosecution, testimony and evidence, serious and persistent offending, treatment as intervention, intervention and prevention, and punishment and corrections. The contributors are drawn from the UK, the USA, and Australia. This updated, revised, and significantly expanded edition develops the picture of diversity and depth of forensic psychology, considers ways in which the discipline has progressed, and identifies challenges for its future sustainability and growth. It includes a new section on treatment as intervention with contributions on personality-disordered offenders, anger control, group work with forensic psychiatric inpatients, and developments in treatment for drug misuse offenders. Additional chapters throughout include contributions on UK police interviews, the investigation and prosecution of rape, the effect of gender in the courtroom, forensic psychology and terrorism, the aetiology of genocide, self-harm in prisons, post-corrections reintegration, and many more.
