and reflection Bringing Developmental Education to Scale: Lessons from the Developmental Education Initiative Janet C. Quint, 2013 There is wide agreement that the well paying jobs of the future will require postsecondary credentials But for many students attending community college developmental or remedial classes in reading composition and or mathematics the courses that students often must complete before they can enroll in courses that confer credit toward a degree pose an often insuperable barrier to progress While over half of all community college students are judged to need at least one developmental class the majority of students who are referred to developmental education do not complete their prescribed sequence of remedial courses much less persist and obtain a diploma or certificate To address this issue the Bill Lumina Foundation for Education funded the evaluation Fifteen colleges that had been early participants in Achieving the Dream AtD Community Colleges Count a national community college reform network dedicated to evidence based decision making were selected to receive grants of 743 000 each over a three year period The institutions are highly diverse in size location and the characteristics of the students they serve The purpose of the dei grants was to enable the colleges to scale up existing interventions or establish new ones that would help students to progress through developmental courses more rapidly and more successfully or to bypass these courses altogether Dei funding also financed state policy teams that sought to influence state higher education legislation and policies Mdc a North Carolina based nonprofit organization was selected as managing partner of the demonstration and in this role monitored and assisted the colleges organized communications and convened regular meetings of demonstration participants Six other organizations made up the partnership that provided leadership and support for the colleges Among these mdrc a nonprofit nonpartisan policy research organization was asked to evaluate the demonstration with the Community College Research Center ccrc at Teachers College Columbia University serving as evaluation partner The directive to the evaluators was to examine the implementation of the dei at the participating colleges This report the second and final report from the evaluation relies on a combination of qualitative data primarily interviews with key personnel conducted during the course of site visits to all 15 institutions and through periodic telephone calls with project directors and quantitative data information on participation and on student outcomes that the colleges regularly collected It addresses three main questions 1 To what extent did the colleges scale up their chosen developmental education reforms to serve more students 2 What factors affected the colleges ability to expand their programs and practices And 3 To what extent were the colleges strategies associated with improvements in student outcomes The report also considers ways that participation in the dei influenced the colleges more broadly For these reasons it may be of interest to other colleges looking to scale up reforms especially reforms that are related to instruction and the provision of student supports as well as to funders concerned about how best to support community colleges in bringing promising ideas to scale Technical Appendix is included Individual chapters contain footnotes Contains 16 tables and 6 figures
