STANDARDS OF PRACTICE

The ATRA Standards for the Practice of Recreational Therapy & Self-Assessment Guide, published in 2013 (revised in 2015), consists of 12 standards and the Self-Assessment Guide (SOP/SAG). The manual was written in a format that provides a comprehensive description of recreational therapy practice, consistent with requirements of accrediting and regulatory agencies and quality recreational therapy practice. Each of the 12 standards include of a rational, structure criteria, which reflects the parameters of practice (facilities, resources etc); process criteria, which focus on the provision of services (practitioner-patient/client interaction, intervention strategies, etc.) and outcome criteria, which reflects the achievement or change in patient/client condition (improved functional level, satisfaction, etc.) resulting from recreational therapy practice.

The Self-Assessment Guide includes the data collection instruments, methodology and scoring worksheets to be used to evaluate compliance of recreational therapy practice with the standards and criteria and to determine opportunities to improve compliance.

The information posted provides the reader with an overview of each of the standards and the rationale for each standard to provide the reader with a general awareness of scope and breadth of the standards of practice. Not posted are the structure, process and outcome criteria for each standard. These structure, process and outcome criteria further define requirements and implementation of the standards and are essential components of the standards for recreational therapy practice.

The Standards of Practice Committee recommends every recreational therapy professional have a copy of the ATRA Standards for the Practice of Recreational Therapy & Self-Assessment Guide and attend trainings provided at conferences to enhance their knowledge and increase
