James Daly is a member of the Department of History at McMaster University.

Sir Robert Filmer (1588-1628) was a defender of the Stuart Power of King against the Unpopular Liberty of the People. His doctrine of aristocratic government had little influence on the thought and political debates of his time, but some of his writings were published over the last few years of his life; but it came under scrutiny later in the century, particularly during the revolution crisis and in the political writings of John Locke. This book is the first comprehensive analysis of his thought, its context, and its place in English political thought as a whole.

Daly examines Filmer's publishing career, his relation to contemporary writers and critics, and the critical success or failure he drew. The book then provides the background for a study of Filmer's theory of aristocracy, his influential concept of law, his relations of prescription, fundamental law, and non-constitutional forms of government, and his insistence that monarchs be not only absolute, but arbitrary as well. Examining Filmer's interpretation of Hobbes's final all things' 'natural power,' here described as 'total jurisdiction,' Daly shows it to be very different from most contemporary thought. In comparing Filmer's thought with that of other revolution and the position taken by his critics, notably Edward Coke, James Tyrone, Algernon Sidney, and of course Locke, he shows it to be strikingly original, almost revolutionary, and frequently dismissed by those who dealt with it.
