College English 260, 1984      The Formation of College English Thomas P. Miller, 1997 In the middle of the eighteenth century English literature composition and rhetoric were introduced almost simultaneously into colleges throughout the British cultural provinces Professorships of rhetoric and belles lettres were established just as print was reaching a growing reading public and efforts were being made to standardize educated taste and usage The provinces saw English studies as a means to upward social mobility through cultural assimilation In the educational centers of England however the introduction of English represented a literacy crisis brought on by provincial institutions that had failed to maintain classical texts and learned languages Today as rhetoric and composition have become reestablished in the humanities in American colleges English studies are being broadly transformed by cultural studies community literacies and political controversies Once again English departments that are primarily departments of literature see these basic writing courses as a sign of a literacy crisis that is undermining the classics of literature The Formation of College English reexamines the civic concerns of rhetoric and the politics that have shaped and continue to shape college English      College Students as They are Edward Foster, 1955      Community College English Courses Tammy Renee Robinson, 2004

Preparing English Learners for College and Career María Santos, Martha Castellón Palacios, Tina Cheuk, Rebecca Greene, Diana Mercado-Garcia, Lisa Zerkel, Kenji Hakuta, Renae Skarin, 2018 How do school communities create environments that fully prepare both English learners and dual language learners for colleges and careers This valuable book profiles six high performing high schools that had a singular focus on improving the educational outcomes of English learners The authors use these case studies to identify a comprehensive set of design elements and shared values that were key factors in yielding extraordinary results These include a school wide language development framework that integrates content analytical practices and language learning a broad and dynamic view of assessment practices intensive social emotional support for students and their families and mission driven staff and leadership that maximize learning opportunities across classrooms The practices employed in these schools are not only essential for English learners success but as the performance data shows they also benefit all students This is my kind of change book clear and deep causes one to think and inspires the reader to what may be possible on a wide scale From the foreword by Michael Fullan professor emeritus University of Toronto The schools featured in this set of beautifully drawn case studies reveal how they managed to beat the odds for their students and there is much to learn by looking closely at what made them so effective Lilly Wong Fillmore professor University of California Berkeley This book is a rich resource for all educators driven to ensure that all multilingual learners are ready for college and career Angélica Infante Green deputy commissioner New York State Education Department

The Evolution of College English Thomas P. Miller, 2014-03-18 Thomas P Miller defines college English studies as literacy studies and examines how it has evolved in tandem with broader developments in literacy and the literate. He maps out four corners of English departments: literature, language studies, teacher education, and writing studies. Miller identifies their development with broader changes in the technologies and economies of literacy that have redefined what students write and read, which careers they enter, and how literature represents their experiences and aspirations. Miller locates the origins of college English studies in the colonial transition from a religious to an oratorical conception of literature. A belletristic model of literature emerged in the nineteenth century in response to the spread of the penny press and state-mandated schooling. Since literary studies became a common school subject, professors of literature have distanced themselves from teachers of literacy. In the Progressive era, that distinction came to structure scholarly organizations such as the MLA, while NCTE was established to develop more broadly based teacher coalitions. In the twentieth century, New Criticism came to provide the operating assumptions for the rise of English departments until those assumptions became critically overloaded with the crash of majors and jobs that began in the 1970s and continues today. For models that will help the discipline respond to such challenges, Miller looks to comprehensive departments of English that value studies of teaching, writing, and language as well as literature. According to Miller, departments in more broadly based institutions have the potential to redress the historical alienation of English departments from their institutional base in work with literacy. Such departments have a potentially quite expansive articulation apparatus. Many are engaged with writing at work in public life with schools and public agencies with access issues and with media, ethnic, and cultural studies. With the privatization of higher education, such pragmatic engagements become vital to sustaining a civic vision of English studies and the humanities generally.

English Language Learners in the Southeastern United States Ester J. de Jong, Eric Dwyer, Mary Elizabeth Wilson-Patton, 2024-07-25 This book examines the impact of and response to the rapidly growing English language learner (ELL) populations in the southeastern United States on K-16 schooling. Using examples of policy and practice from seven states—Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, and Tennessee—the book explores how the contemporary context of accountability regimes and neoliberal tenets affect educational responses to the increased linguistic and cultural diversity in schools and how these realities may be different from when traditional states such as California or Florida were developing their responses to immigration. The collection of chapters addresses key questions of teacher preparation, effective infrastructures, and frameworks for serving ELLs, dual language, bilingual education, and advocacy efforts at the state, district, and local level in the Southeast. The authors describe promising practices in each state but also note the need for more systemic, statewide approaches that resist the enduring monolingual discourse that has historically characterized much of ELL schooling. They call for transformative policies and practices that take current research into account and that stress the centrality of pluralistic principles to design effective schools for ELLs.
