

Development of Sanskrit Literature in Kerala: an Appraisal through Campu literature of Kerala

Sanskrit flourished in as a language of knowledge. Where as the development of Mālayālam took place through Baktikāvyaś and modern literary genres. In the Pan Indian consideration Sanskrit creative language became cultivated elegant language by the time of Bāṇa Bhaṭṭa and the like. The prose literature of that period possesses a higher level of Development.

When one examine the major Sanskrit literature of Kerala, one can understand that Śaktibhadra and Kulaśekhara marks the beginning stage of Creative literature in Sanskrit from Kerala. Philosophical literature of Kerala is not mentioned here because the study is about the language of creative literature.

The Campūs and Sandeśakāvyas of Kerala have a correlating period of development that is from 13th to 19th centuries of common era. This period mark the second and third stages of transformation or development of Sanskrit in Kerala. Hence an attempt is made here to study the development of Sanskrit language in Kerala based on Campūs.

In the case of Campū literature it is to be noted that south India can be considered as the main area of development of this genre. Before the works in Sanskrit many works of this genre developed. Kannada, Telugu, Tamil and Malayalam [Maṇipravālam] This points to an important aspect of cultural domination. Generally, many of our literary traditions it is believed to [to an extant very much true also] have a Sanskrit Language and Cultural base. Regional languages and cultures in course of time adapt them. But in some cases it happens vice versa. Campū literature is an example of this. That is why we have the definition of Campū in the work Kāvyaadarśa of Daṇḍi in seventh century of common era and the first Sanskrit Campū is only written in 10th century , Nala Campū or Damayantīkatha. Daṇḍi might have been familiar with the works of this genre in regional languages

The Campū literature of Kerala has a three fold phase of Development.

The first phase include the first Sanskrit Campū from Kerala Amogharāghava written in 13th century of common era. This work is considered as the first Sanskrit Campū work from Kerala
