W. Garrod,2015-06-24 Excerpt from The Religion of All Good Men and Other Studies in Christian Ethics It is constantly said that the historical criticism of Christianity has for the present generation lost its interest It is a wave that has spent its force In a sense this is true Historical criticism no longer greatly interests those classes whom formerly it did interest It has begun I fancy to appeal to other classes to whom the force of its appeal constitutes since they are but ill trained in critical habits a lively peril With this I am not concerned I am here concerned to call attention to the fact that the classes who formerly busied themselves with the criticism of Christianity on its historical side are now interesting themselves in the criticism of it from

Biblical Ethics and Social Change Stephen Mott, 2011-03-23 For the past thirty years Biblical Ethics and Social Change has provided a keenly insightful biblical argument for intentional institutional change on behalf of social justice Stephen Charles Mott shows how central concepts in biblical and theological ethics grace evil love justice and the Reign of God figure into social change arguing that Christian social change must be rooted not only in justice but in the grace received through the death and resurrection of Christ Mott also uses ethics scripture and theology to evaluate methods for carrying out that intentional social change through examination of the complex roles of evangelism countercommunity civil disobedience armed revolution and political reform He argues that change can only be brought about by taking upon oneself the cause of the oppressed and by using all available and legitimate means of meeting basic needs by providing for all what is essential for inclusion in society This revised second edition contains Mott s further reflections on the topic and updates its applications to contemporary social life Book jacket
