

Difference between Phonetics and Phonology

Phonetics

- The scientific study of production, transmission and perception of speech sounds in general is called phonetics.
- Phonetics concerns with physical production, acoustic transmission and perception of speech sound.
- Phonetics deals with production of human speech sound often without prior knowledge of the language being spoken.

Phonology

- Phonology is the branch of linguistics which deals with organization of sounds in language. It studies the sound systems of languages.
- Phonology describes the way sounds function within the language.
- Phonology is about patterns of the sounds. It is the study of how these sounds are used in language, and it specifies any language.
