ABOUT THE COURSE

In this course, we will use an interdisciplinary lens to broadly understand the roles that gender and inequality play in society and in our everyday lives. We will analyze and discuss gender as a historical, contextual, intersectional, concept that lies at the crossroads of race, class, sexuality, citizenship, age, size and ability. We will use a range of interdisciplinary concepts, tools, and methods to understand and analyze sex, gender, femininity, masculinity, and sexuality. Through readings, multimedia, experiential projects and class discussion, we will study how gender and equality are socially and culturally constructed.

In what ways are gender and inequality tied up with and inseparable from other forms of identification such as race, disability, age, ethnicity, citizenship and class? How do intersecting systems of oppression, such as racism, sexism, heterosexism, homophobia, transphobia, and ageism shape a experience? How do they also shape the ways in which people resist inequality and lobby for change?

Note: Regardless as to opinion on whether or not gender is only a social construct, like any identity, gender can be (and often is) extremely personal. As we explore both gender and inequality in this course, please be mindful of your peers' multiple and intersecting race, class, gender and sexual identities—particularly in relation to your own perspectives. I do encourage a critical lens in this course, which includes any challenges to the course material.

In this class we will be covering many popular and potentially controversial topics in our modern society. As your instructor, I will say and do things that I may not personally believe to help you understand the diversity and complexity of these sociological and cultural issues. Know that it is my responsibility as an instructor to educate you as unbiased as possible, therefore I will attempt to teach as such. I reserve the right to change or alter the course requirements and schedule as necessary throughout the semester.

Handbook of the Sociology of Education Maureen T. Hallinan, 2006-11-24 The aim of the Handbook of Sociology of Education is to present the most theoretically grounded and empirically rigorous sociological analyses of schools to date The authors are distinguished researchers in the field Their contributions to the Handbook offer major theoretical perspectives on the schooling process and describe significant empirical studies of schools and their effects on individuals and society The research presented in the Handbook is built on three fundamental tenets of sociology First the authors adopt the perspective that schools are a central institution in society An understanding of the function of schooling in social life is enhanced by viewing schools as interrelated with other societal institutions The study of how the context of schooling influences education processes is critical to an understanding of school outcomes Rather than being determined solely by ascribed and achieved characteristics an individual's cognitive and social development are influenced heavily by the structures and networks in which the individual is embedded Communities families schools and social groups are critical elements in the educative process By viewing the school as a societal institution and highlighting the interaction between context and individual behavior the Handbook chapters provide a broader and deeper understanding of the determinants of learning in contemporary society The second sociological insight that guides the research in the Handbook is that the school is a social system
