Davies, 2015-09-16 How History Works assesses the social function of academic knowledge in the humanities exemplified by history and offers a critique of the validity of historical knowledge The book focusses on history's academic disciplinary ethos to offer a reconception of the discipline of history arguing that it is an existential liability if critical analysis reveals the sense that history offers to the world to be illusory what stops historical scholarship from becoming a disguise for pessimism or nihilism History is routinely invoked in all kinds of cultural political economic psychological situations to provide a reliable account or justification of what is happening Moreover it addresses a world already receptive to comprehensive historical explanations since everyone has some knowledge of history everyone can be manipulated by it This book analyses the relationship between specialized knowledge and everyday experience taking phenomenology Husserl and pragmatism James as methodological guides It is informed by a wide literature sceptical of the sense academic historical expertise produces and of the work history does represented by thinkers such as Schopenhauer Nietzsche Valéry Anders and Cioran How History Works discusses how history makes sense of the world even if what happens is senseless arguing that behind the smoke screen of historical scholarship looms a chaotic world dynamic indifferent to human existence It is valuable reading for anyone interested in historiography and historical theory Doing History Mark Donnelly, Dr. Claire Norton, Claire Norton, 2011 History as an academic discipline has dramatically changed over the last few decades and has become much more exciting and varied as a result of ideas from other disciplines the influence of postmodernism and historians incorporation of their own theoretical reflections into their work The way history is studied at university level can vary greatly from history at school or as represented in the media and Doing History bridges that gap Aimed at students of history in their final year of secondary education or beginning degrees this is the ideal introduction to studying history as an academic subject at university Doing History presents the ideas and debates that shape how we do history today covering arguments about nature of historical knowledge and the function of historical writing whether we can really ever know what happened in the past what sources historians depend on and whether the historians version of history

The Challenge of Rethinking History Education Bruce A. VanSledright, 2010-09-13 Every few years in the United States history teachers go through what some believe is an embarrassing national ritual A representative group of students sit down to take a standardized U S history test and the results show varied success Sizable percentages of students score at or below a basic understanding of the country s history Pundits seize on these results to argue that not only are students woefully ignorant about history but history teachers are simply not doing an adequate job teaching historical facts The overly common practice of teaching history as a series of dates memorizing the textbook and taking notes on teachers lectures ensues In stark contrast social studies educators like Bruce A VanSledright argue instead for a more inquiry oriented approach to history teaching and learning that fosters a sense of citizenship through the critical skills of historical investigation Detailed case studies of exemplar teachers are included in this timely book to make visible in an easily comprehensible way the thought processes of skilled teachers Each case is then unpacked further to clearly address the question of what history teachers need to know to teach in an investigative way The Challenge of Rethinking History Education is a must read for anyone looking for a guide to both the theory and practice of what it means to teach historical thinking to engage in investigative practice with students and to increase students capacity to critically read and assess the nature of the complex culture in which they live
