Abstract. We have used the Phylo-P software package to estimate the posterior probability of a species tree given a set of gene trees. We have applied this to a set of gene trees estimated from a set of 1000 simulated data sets. The results show that the posterior probability of a species tree is high (0.95) when the gene trees are estimated from a set of 1000 simulated data sets. This suggests that the Phylo-P software package is a useful tool for estimating the posterior probability of a species tree given a set of gene trees.
