The Politics Of Water Urban Protest Gender And Power In Monterrey Mexico:

The Politics of Water Vivienne Bennett, 1995-11-15 Monterrey is Mexico's second most important industrial city emerging in this era of free trade as a cornerstone of Mexico's economic development. But development has been uneven and has taken a toll. As recently as the early 1980s, nearly a quarter of the city's almost three million inhabitants did not have running water in their homes. At the same time, heavy industry, especially steel, iron, chemical, and paper works, were major users of water in their production processes. Extensive industrialization coupled with a lack of infrastructure development, astonishing in a major industrial city, raises serious questions about the process of planning urban services in Mexico. Bennett uses the water crisis of the 1980s as a lens through which to reveal this planning process and the provision of public services in Monterrey. She finds three groups who were central to the evolution of the city's water system: federal and state government leaders, the regional private sector elite, the Grupo Monterrey, and women living in the low-income neighborhoods of the city. Bennett unravels the politics of water in Monterrey by following three threads of inquiry. First, she examines the water services themselves: what was built, when, why, and who paid for them. She then reveals the response of poor women to the water crisis, analyzing who participated in protests, the strategies they used, and how the government responded. And finally, she considers the dynamics of planning water services for the private sector and the government in investment and management. In the end, Monterrey's water services improved because power relations shifted and because poor women in Monterrey used protests to make national news out of the city's water crisis. The Politics of Water makes a significant contribution to the emerging scholarship on regional politics in Mexico and to a deeper understanding of the Monterrey region in particular. Until recently, most scholarly writing on Mexico spoke of the national political system as a monolithic whole. Scholars such as Vivienne Bennett are now recognizing the power of local citizens and the significant differences among regions when it comes to politics, policy making, and governmental investment decisions. Water, Power and Citizenship José Esteban

Castro, 2005-11-21 Water, Power and Citizenship investigates the interrelationship between water politics and institutions and the development of citizenship rights from a historical sociological perspective. The evolution of water's manifold social character and values as a source of power, as a public good, as a commodity, or as a universal right is examined in the light of ever-changing and mutually binding social and ecological processes. The Basin of Mexico's rich water history becomes the vantage point to cast light on one of the most crucial challenges facing the international community: that of eliminating water inequality and injustice. Contemporary Mexican Politics Emily Edmonds-Poli, David A. Shirk, 2020-03-10 This comprehensive and engaging text explores contemporary Mexico's political, economic, and social development and examines the most important policy issues facing the country today. Readers will find this widely praised book continues to be the most current and accessible work available on Mexico's politics and policy. Opposing Currents Vivienne Bennett, Sonia

Dávila-Poblete, María Nieves Rico, 2005-01-15 In every part of the world, looming or full-blown water crises threaten communities from the largest cities to the smallest rural towns Over the past two decades there has been increased attention at the global level to the devastating effects of water shortages and pollution and policies and principles for implementing the sustainable management of water resources have proliferated But scholars and activists are beginning to understand that top down environmental policies are doomed to fail if they do not address local cultures and customary uses As the contributors to Opposing Currents illustrate that failure is most evident in the inability to recognize that women not only should become central to water management at the local level but that in fact they already are This volume focuses on women in Latin America as stakeholders in water resources management It makes their contributions to grassroots efforts more visible explains why doing so is essential for effective public policy and planning in the water sector and provides guidelines for future planning and project implementation After an in depth review of gender and water management policies and issues in relation to domestic usage irrigation and sustainable development the book provides a series of case studies prepared by an interdisciplinary group of scholars and activists Covering countries throughout the hemisphere and moving freely from impoverished neighborhoods to the conference rooms of international agencies the book explores the various ways in which women are and are not involved in local water initiatives across Latin America Insightful analyses reveal what these case studies imply for the success or failure of various regional efforts to improve water accessibility and usability and suggest new ways of thinking about gender and the environment in the context of specific policies and practices

Building the Borderlands: A Transnational History of Irrigated Cotton along the MexicoTexas Border Casey Walsh, 2008 Cotton crucial to the economy of the American South has also played a vital role in the making of the Mexican north The Lower Rio Bravo Rio Grande Valley irrigation zone on the border with Texas in northern Tamaulipas Mexico was the centerpiece of the Cardenas government's effort to make cotton the basis of the national economy This irrigation district built and settled by Mexican Americans repatriated from Texas was a central feature of Mexico's effort to control and use the waters of the international river for irrigated agriculture Drawing on previously unexplored archival sources Casey Walsh discusses the relations among various groups comprising the social field of cotton production in the borderlands By describing the complex relationships among these groups Walsh contributes to a clearer understanding of capitalism and the state of transnational economic forces of agricultural and water issues in the U S Mexican borderlands and of the environmental impacts of economic development Building the Borderlands crosses a number of disciplinary thematic and regional frontiers integrating perspectives and literature from the United States and Mexico from anthropology and history and from political economic and cultural studies Walsh's important transnational study will enjoy a wide audience among scholars of Latin American and Western U S history the borderlands and environmental and agricultural history as well as anthropologists and others interested in the environment and water rights

Women's Participation In Mexican Political Life Victoria Rodriguez, 2019-03-13 To date the mainstream literature on Mexican politics has said little about women even though their participation as formal political actors has increased dramatically in the past fifteen years. Somewhat surprisingly the political participation of women although well documented in other Latin American countries has been neglected in the case

Informal Metropolis David Yee (Historian of Latin America), 2024 Informal Metropolis uncovers how a former lake bed on the edge of Mexico City grew into the world's largest shantytown Ciudad Nezahualcōtli and rethinks the relationship between urban space and inequality in twentieth century Mexico

Suffering from Water Michael C. Ennis-McMillan, 2025-09-25 Suffering from Water invites readers to immerse themselves in the complexity of water insecurity through the lens of a small town in Mexico. The text examines how residents of the pueblo La Purificación Tepetitla experience suffering from water, a phrase that locals use to communicate the pain and anxiety associated with inadequate household water supplies. Ennis-McMillan allows readers to develop a new cross-cultural perspective on this major global health issue and to critically examine their own cultural assumptions about drinking water and health, including individualistic consumer-oriented ways of thinking about drinking water as a commodity rather than as a basic necessity, if not a human right. The people of La Purificación, a pueblo of indigenous origin in central Mexico, draw on their history of challenging external threats to local water resources. Following customary law, the community guides its water practices with indigenous traditions, and local water officers use leveling practices to ensure that every household has access to running water. These traditions link water use rights to religious fiestas and volunteer labor activities. Not only do residents celebrate their pueblo originario; they also cherish their customs, which fosters health and well-being for the entire pueblo.

Water Engineering and Management through Time Enrique Cabrera, 2010-08-06 Water Engineering and Management Learning from History explores the pair technology/water use as an indivisible pair since the first member of the binomial determines the second, which in the light of the knowledge available in the 21st century and with a conception focused on the near future goes beyond the limits set by nature itself.

Water Governance in Bolivia Nasya Sara Razavi, 2022-04-28 This book examines water remunicipalization in Cochabamba since the Water War, offering innovative methodological and theoretical conceptualizations of what it means to be public, helping to move debates on water services beyond the paralyzing binary of public versus private with a focus on the contested terrain of community engagement around water services. The Cochabamba Water War of 2000 brought together city residents of all stripes to mobilize against water privatization and gain back public control of the city's water utility. This event catapulted anti-privatization movements around the world, but two decades later the water movement's vision of democratic water provision remains largely unfulfilled, and the city suffers from a protracted water crisis. Building a typology of participation, this book explores the difficulty in rebuilding a strong public water service in Cochabamba by analyzing the different and often incompatible understandings and interpretations of social control and public participation. Applying this framework to the Bolivian context and more specifically to the water and sanitation sector in Cochabamba, the book uncovers whose interests are served and which groups are included or excluded from decision making and access to water This exercise illustrates how in their implementation participatory practices are not linear and can be distorted or appropriated towards different ends This book will be of great interest to students and scholars of water governance natural resource management public policy social movements and Latin American studies
