The Politics of Roman Memory Marion Kruse, 2019-09-06 What did it mean to be Roman after the fall of the western Roman empire in 476 and what were the implications of new formulations of Roman identity for the inhabitants of both east and west How could an empire be Roman when it was in fact at war with Rome How did these issues motivate and shape historical constructions of Constantinople as the New Rome And how did the idea that a Roman empire could fall influence political rhetoric in Constantinople In The Politics of Roman Memory Marion Kruse visits and revisits these questions to explore the process by which the emperors historians jurists antiquarians and poets of the eastern Roman empire employed both history and mythologized versions of the same to reimagine themselves not merely as Romans but as the only Romans worthy of the name The Politics of Roman Memory challenges conventional narratives of the transformation of the classical world the supremacy of Christian identity in late antiquity and the low literary merit of writers in this period Kruse reconstructs a coherent intellectual movement in Constantinople that redefined Romanness in a Constantinopolitan idiom through the manipulation of Roman historical memory Debates over the historical parameters of Romanness drew the attention of figures as diverse as Zosimos long dismissed as a cranky pagan outlier but here rehabilitated and the emperor Justinian as well as the major authors of Justinian's reign such as Prokopios Ioannes Lydos and Jordanes Finally by examining the narratives embedded in Justinian's laws Kruse demonstrates the importance of historical memory to the construction of imperial authority

Trauma, Memory, and Narrative in the Contemporary South African Novel, 2012-01-01 The contributions to this volume probe the complex relationship of trauma memory and narrative By looking at the South African situation through the lens of trauma they make clear how the psychic deformations and injuries left behind by racism and colonialism cannot be mended by material reparation or by simply reversing economic and political power structures Western trauma theories as developed by scholars such as Caruth van der Kolk Herman and others are insufficient for analysing the more complex situation in a postcolony such as South Africa This is because Western trauma concepts focus on the individual traumatized by a single identifiable event that causes PTSD Post Traumatic Stress Disorder What we need is an understanding of trauma that sees it not only as a result of an identifiable event but also as the consequence of an historical condition in the case of South Africa that of colonialism and more specifically of apartheid For most black and coloured South Africans the structural violence of apartheid's laws were the existential condition under which they had to exist The living conditions in the townships pass laws relocation and racial segregation affected great parts of the South African population and were responsible for the collective traumatization of several generations This trauma however is not an unclaimed and unclaimable experience Postcolonial thinkers who have been reflecting on the experience of violence and trauma in a colonial context writing from within a Fanonian tradition have on the contrary believed in the importance of reclaiming the past and of transcending mechanisms of victimization and resentment so typical of traumatized consciousnesses Narration and the novel have a decisive role to play here

Barbara Z. Thaden,2013-10-28 This is the first full length study to focus specifically on representations of motherhood in fiction by such Victorian writers as Elizabeth Gaskell Margaret Oliphant Caroline Norton and Ellen Price Wood These authors presented an idealized view of motherhood as part of a campaign to gain social and legal status for mothering in a society in which married women were not legal entities and children born in wedlock were the inalienable property of their fathers These writers used dead mother plots which reversed New Testament parables so that the mother plays the leading role and maternal circle plots which portray adult daughters and their mothers raising children outside marriage This fiction which showed how children benefit from good mothering was instrumental in married mothers eventually obtaining equal parental rights UPTON SINCLAIR: 29 Books in One Volume Upton Sinclair,2017-09-10 This meticulously edited collection is
