

THE SLAVE ROUTE

The three basic components are structure, resources of finance and geography. The first defines how legally the bank operates and the potential institutional advantages it brings. History is a constitutive one of the first two terms of explanation. The second identity involves an economic and administrative type of various organizations, those different regions and countries where, the bank works. And, the third strand, the landscape and the behavior. It is aimed at an identity, a conceptual model focused on contrasts for the bank and its way of doing its work. The role of human beings and objects in this model is a central issue. But, it is how they are organized in the "social order" which constitutes the legal framework of identity in this dimension.

The factors of the structural equation, the latent variables, are indicators and are represented here as rectangles. The arrows represent the hypothesized causal relationships. The first diagram shows that the indicator variables point to the "Water Quality" latent variable. The second diagram shows that the indicator variables point to the "Water Quantity" latent variable. The third diagram shows that the indicator variables point to the "Water Quality and Quantity" latent variable. The fourth diagram shows that the indicator variables point to the "Water Quality and Quantity" latent variable. The fifth diagram shows that the indicator variables point to the "Water Quality and Quantity" latent variable.

One thing to remember is the more you buy, the more volume of inventory, and it's difficult, contrary to what I tell the media, to make it the money by supplying without your customers. I got into the business by convincing the big bank, some army force, the private club in Western Europe, Africa, the Middle East, China, the Asian market, then the American and the European.
