Home in the Howling Wilderness Peter Holland, 2013-11-01 During the 19th century New Zealand's South Island underwent an environmental transformation at the hands of European settlers They diverted streams and drained marshes burned native vegetation and planted hedges and grasses stocked farms with sheep and cattle and poured on fertilizer Through various letter books ledgers diaries and journals this book reveals how the first European settlers learned about their new environment talking to Maori and other Pakeha observing weather patterns and the shifting populations of rabbits reading newspapers and going to lectures at the Mechanics Institute As the New Zealand environment threw up surprise after surprise the settlers who succeeded in farming were those who listened closely to the environment This rich and detailed contribution to environmental history and the literature of British colonial history and farming concludes contrary to the assertions of some North American environmental historians that the first generation of European settlers in New Zealand were by no means unthinking agents of change

book also examines major world ecosystems or biomes such as forests grasslands and oceans as if they were in a natural condition and discusses the affect of human impact upon such systems The book also discusses the alternative future relationships of man and other living organisms Although over 30 years old the book still contains a useful and detailed overview of biogeography It will be of interest to students or lecturers in ecology biology and the environmental sciences
