

Project Ideas

Consider the following extension projects for your class.

- Timeline of George Washington's Life: Students can create a visual timeline showcasing the key events and milestones in George Washington's life. They can include important dates, illustrations, and brief descriptions to highlight significant moments from his childhood to his presidency.
- Biographical Diorama: Students can construct a diorama that represents a significant event or period in George Washington's life. They can use various materials to create a three-dimensional scene, such as a replica of Mount Vernon or a battlefield from the Revolutionary War.
- Character Traits Collage: Students can explore George Washington's character traits and create a collage that represents his qualities as a leader. They can search for quotes, images, and symbols that embody traits such as integrity, bravery, and perseverance and assemble them into a visually appealing collage.
- Presidential Speech: Students can write and deliver a persuasive speech as if they were George Washington running for president. They can research his beliefs, values, and goals, and use that information to create a compelling speech that captures Washington's vision for the young nation.
- Letter Exchange: Students can imagine themselves as historical figures corresponding with George Washington. They can research and write letters from the perspective of influential individuals of the time, such as Thomas Jefferson, Abigail Adams, or a soldier from the Continental Army, engaging in a fictional letter exchange with Washington to discuss important events and issues of the era.
- Mount Vernon Travel Brochure: Students can create a travel brochure promoting a visit to Mount Vernon, George Washington's estate. They can research and include key information about the site, such as its historical significance, architectural features, and highlights of a visit. Students can design an appealing layout with captivating images and persuasive language to entice readers to explore this important landmark.
