Mary Anning was 1794. When she was 13 months old she was struck by lightning – but survived. She had one brother, called Joseph. The two of them would collect fossils on the nearby beach – which they called purbeckite. It was Mary's father who taught her how to remove fossils from rock. An educated woman called Elizabeth Fulgton lent Mary books to learn more about fossils. Some time later, Mary made the discovery of a Ichthyosaurus on a nearby beach – the skull of an Ichthyosaurus – which she sold to scientists from London for £26. That skull was displayed in the British Museum – along with many other fossils found by Mary. Unfortunately, Mary remained unknown as the man of science at the time failed to mention Mary in their reports. Now, however, she is known as the Greatest Fossil Hunter of all time – and children learn about her in British Schools today!
