Journal of Commonwealth and Postcolonial Studies ,2001 The Best of Roy's Rhetoric Roy E. Ault,1999 Elements of Rhetoric Richard Whately,2013-09 This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book without typos from the publisher Not indexed Not illustrated 1874 edition Excerpt who being in all cases less able to look beneath the surface of things obtains at the first glance the best view he can take of any subject and therefore can display without any need of artifice that easy unembarrassed confidence which can never be with equal effect assumed To speak perfectly well in short a man must feel that he has got to the bottom of the subject and to feel this on occasions where from the nature of the case it is impossible he really can have done so is inconsistent with the character of great profundity PART I OF THE INVENTION ARRANGEMENT AND INTRODUCTION OF PROPOSITIONS AND ARGUMENTS Chap I Of Propositions 1 It was remarked in the Treatise on inquiry a Logic that in the process of Investigation pro ter Truth perly so called viz that by which we endeavour to discover truth it must of course be undistinguishable certain to him who is entering on that process what the conclusion will be to which his researches will lead but that in the process of conveying truth to others by reasoning even in what may be termed according to the view 1 have at present taken the rhetorical process the conclusion or conclusions which are to be established must be present to the mind of him who is conducting the Argument and whose business is to find Proofs of a given proposition It is evident therefore that the first step to be taken by him is to lay down distinctly in his own mind the proposition or propositions to be proved I might in deed at first sight appear superfluous even to mention so obvious a rule but experience shows that it is no means uncommon for a young or ill instructed writer to content himself with such a vague and indistinct view of the point he American Rhetoric from Roosevelt to Reagan Halford Ross Ryan,1983 The student of contemporary American public address rhetorical criticism and persuasion needs two fundamental kinds of original materials upon which to build a successful mastery of these disciplines I believe that the student can begin to study these disciplines by scrutinizing texts of speeches But which speeches should one study From many useful criteria I chose two that somewhat overlap First I selected significant or standard political speakers I make the word political go beyond mere party politics and use the word in its original and wider Greek sense of the polis the concerns of the state Second I selected speeches which can be treated as examples of advocacy or debate on important issues of the American polis pg xi Introduction to Rhetoric William B. Cairns,2013-09 This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book without typos from the publisher Not indexed Not illustrated 1899 edition Excerpt chapter ii language adapted to the needs of the reader I The Theory of Economy In his essay on The Philosophy of Style Herbert Spencer puts forth the theory that the secret of all good style lies in economizing the reader's mental energy He assumes that the object of composition is to convey thought to the reader Words sentences and paragraphs are useless except for this purpose Now the less mental energy the reader needs to expend in getting the idea the more he has left to expend in considering and memorizing it That style will be best therefore which gives its idea to the reader with the least effort on his part Language may be compared to a machine which the writer uses for the purpose of conveying thought to the mind of the reader All energy spent in overcoming the friction of the machine is lost so far as real work is concerned Every boy knows that it is easier to ride a mile on a good bicycle than on one that runs hard or to state it differently that with the same amount of labor he can ride farther on a good wheel than on a poor one In just the same way it is easier for him to get a lesson from a textbook that is clearly written than from one in which the sentences are a little hard to understand because if he does not have to study over the language he can put his energy into understanding and memorizing the thought In stating the principle of economy Mr Spencer seems to assume that the reader brings to the perusal of any work a fixed amount of mental energy This is not strictly true The writer may not only be economical in the use of the energy which his reader would naturally expend but may stimulate him to expend more A bicycle rider when he wishes to do his best n
