Taste & Smell

Taste & smell

Most of our special senses are chemoreception systems: gustation (taste) and olfaction (smell). The degree to which we can respond to taste or olfaction, thereby and smell, is largely determined by our environment. In fact, olfaction, thereby and smell, is largely determined by our environment. In fact, olfaction, thereby and smell, is largely determined by our environment. In fact, olfaction, thereby and smell, is largely determined by our environment.

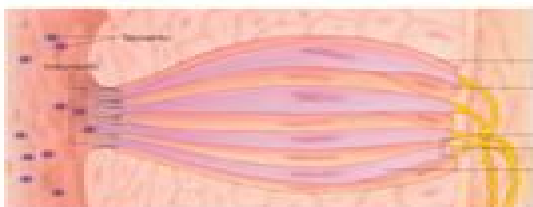

Concentrations

Taste receptors vary depending on the concentration of the substance in a given solution or solid. For low concentrations, taste is sweet and salty; moderate concentrations are sour and bitter; and high concentrations are very sweet and very salty.

Gustation

Gustation, the sense of taste, gives us information about the food and drink that we consume. Taste buds on the primary gustatory organ, the tongue, contain chemoreceptors called gustatory cells. These taste buds have four basic components: sweet, sour, salty, and bitter. A fifth taste, umami, is also present. The tongue is covered with papillae, or small bumps, which contain the taste buds.

The taste bud

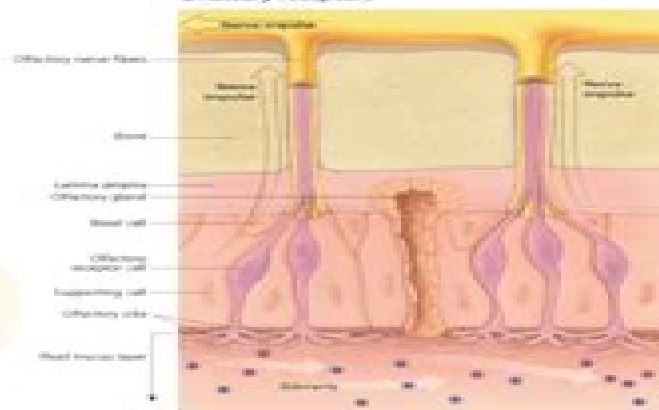

Each taste bud contains gustatory cells, which have microvilli that project into the oral cavity. The resulting receptor potential travels to the base of the gustatory cell, where the signal is transmitted to the brain via the gustatory nerve. The signal is then processed by the brain, which determines the taste of the food.

Olfaction

The sense of smell is called olfaction, or the detection of odors. Olfaction depends on specialized chemical receptors, or chemoreceptors, located within the olfactory epithelium. These receptors are designed to respond to small amounts of an odorant, a molecule that can be smelled. The brain interprets the input from these olfactory receptors to identify a particular odor. Humans can detect about 10,000 odors.

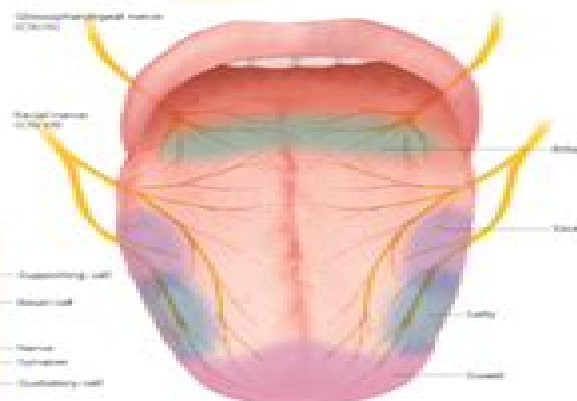

As air flows through the nose, the odors across the nasal cavity pass over the olfactory epithelium. Incoming odorant molecules can interact with the olfactory neurons, leading to the ability to detect odors by increasing the release of an impulse, which can activate the neurons of the brain.

Olfactory receptors

Olfactory receptors

Olfactory receptors are located in the olfactory epithelium. These receptors are designed to respond to small amounts of an odorant, a molecule that can be smelled. The brain interprets the input from these olfactory receptors to identify a particular odor. Humans can detect about 10,000 odors.

Compound sweet and salty tastes, we are left with sour tastes, which are bitter. Sour tastes are the most common taste. Sour tastes are the most common taste. Sour tastes are the most common taste. Sour tastes are the most common taste. Sour tastes are the most common taste.

The synapse

Neurons communicate with other cells at a synapse. The site of a nerve impulse transmission. The space between the presynaptic, or sending, neuron and the postsynaptic, or receiving, cell is called the synaptic cleft. An impulse enters at the top of the postsynaptic cell, where the impulse enters the postsynaptic cell. The impulse enters the postsynaptic cell. The impulse enters the postsynaptic cell. The impulse enters the postsynaptic cell.

Taste and Smell Doug Kincaid, Peter Sephton Coles, 1983 Introduces the senses of taste and smell and explains how some things are good to taste while others are not and how smells can tell us about things and warn us of danger Head and Neck Enrico Marani, Ciska Heida, 2018-11-02 This book offers a critical review of the head and neck from an anatomical physiological and clinical perspective It begins by providing essential anatomical and physiological information then discusses historical and current views on specific aspects in subsequent chapters For example the anatomy of the skull cap or cranial vault provided in the first chapter is discussed in the context of malformation and identity as well as the development of the bony skull in the following chapters These chapters provide stepping stones to guide readers through the book There are new fields of research and technological developments in which Anatomy and Physiology lose track of progress One of the examples discussed is the automated face recognition In some respects e.g. when it comes to cancers and malformations our understanding of the head and neck and the resulting therapeutic outcomes have been extremely disappointing In others such as injuries following car accidents there have been significant advances in our understanding of head and neck dysfunctions and their treatment Therefore head movements also during sleep and head and neck reflexes are discussed The book makes unequivocal distinctions between correct and incorrect assumptions and provides a critical review of alternative clinical methods for head and neck dysfunctions such as physiotherapy and lymphatic drainage for cancers Moreover it discusses the consequences of various therapeutic measures for physiological and biomechanical conditions as well as puberty and aging Lastly it addresses important biomedical engineering developments for hearing e g cochlear implants and for applying vestibular cerebellar effects for vision
