After the 1994 Congress, the House passed the Department of Education's "20th Century Schools" bill, which would have created a new Department of Education, and the Senate passed a similar bill. The House and Senate bills were identical, except for the name of the new department, which was "Department of Education" in the House bill and "Department of Education and the Arts" in the Senate bill. The House bill was passed by a vote of 233-197, and the Senate bill was passed by a vote of 70-29.
