

What is a desert?

Deserts are the driest parts of the world—places where it hardly ever rains. Most have less than 10 inches (25 centimeters) of rain per year—one tenth of the rain that falls every year in rainforests, the wettest parts of the world.

Deserts aren't only the world's driest places. They're also the windiest.

Are all deserts hot?

In many of the world's deserts, it is hot enough in the daytime to fry an egg on a rock. Not all deserts are like this, though. Some deserts have baking hot summers and freezing cold winters, while others are chilly all year long.

Even if you're heading for a hot desert, remember to pack a sweater. Although the daytime temperature can soar to over 140°F (40°C), it can drop to below 32°F (0°C) at night!
